- A PhD in Sociology, Politics, or any other related disciplines in the social sciences.
- Research expertise in religion and politics in Asia.
- Skills and experience in quantitative (particularly survey design) and qualitative research methods.
- A promising publication record.
- Excellent communication skills in speaking and writing.
- Experience conducting fieldwork/data collection in Asia.
- A good team player with the ability to work closely with faculty, staff and external collaborators.
- Good project management skills with the ability to multitask effectively.
- Ability/willingness (if requested) to teach one sociology undergraduate course per academic year.
- Candidates who are able to conduct fieldwork research in China, and are fluent in Spoken and Written English and Mandarin will be considered favourably. This is because the faculty's mixed methods research involves many Mandarin speaking older adults, this requires not only verbal communication but also written communications skills due to transcription and translation work.

We regret that only shortlisted candidates will be notified.
